Using our Time, Talents and Treasures to God's Glory

Using our Time, Talents and Treasures to God's Glory is a book by Alan R. Millard, published by Barbour Books in 2014. The book explores the biblical concepts of time, talent, and treasure, and how they can be applied to modern life. It is part of a series of books that discuss the intersection of faith and finance, and is aimed at helping readers understand how to use their resources in accordance with their faith.

Millard defines time as the most precious and limited resource we possess, and emphasizes the importance of making the most of every moment. He then turns to talent, which he explains as the unique abilities and gifts that each person possesses, and the importance of using them to serve others. Finally, he discusses treasure, which he defines as anything that we cherish or hold dear, and how it can be used to bring glory to God.

The book includes practical advice and exercises for readers to reflect on their own time, talent, and treasure, and to consider how they can put these concepts into action in their daily lives. It also includes a chapter on stewardship, which discusses how to manage our resources in a way that is consistent with our faith.

Overall, Using our Time, Talents and Treasures to God's Glory is a thought-provoking and inspiring book that encourages readers to think deeply about their use of time, talent, and treasure, and to consider how they can use these resources to glorify God.
